This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1764. Excerpt: ... receives as much from his ground as the ground is intrinsically worth. Whereas in the wild, and, as one may fay, uncultivated state of nature, thole proprietors that have a great live stock, consume all the herbage in the latter end of spring, and the beginning of lummer, favouring their own pasturages, and having a secure retirement for their cattle, when the lands in common can afford no more food, whilst the poor peasant's only cow or horse have no place to retreat to. Such considerations induced one of our ancestors to observe, at a time when all England was divided into parties for and against this very article, "That the poor man who is Monarch of but one inclosed acre, will receive more profit from it than from his share of many acres in common with others V And therefore it was both generous and politic in a neighbouring King, about 2 years ago, to give up for the fake of the poor, more than two hundred thousand waste acres, to be divided into small parcels for the emolument of the community: Which ground (supposing it to be of an inferior quality) will afford food for forty thousand new inhabitants. From whom and their descendants will arise a considerable national strength, as well as increase of population in half a century. Yet Kat's rebellion in England may be called a rebellion against inclosures , nor was it the first time that the populace did not see their own true interest. I will only add under this article, that many Royal forests and chaces (with the consent of our most Gracious Sovereign) might be applied to much better husbandry uses than they answer at present: The more profitable part of the timber being still D 4 pre Fulliu' Hvlj State. preserved: New plantations of timber-trees might also be made, and various common fruit-beari...
