With the graying of America the challenges facing mental health professionals are daunting indeed. Over 28 million Americans are now over 60 and their ranks are expected to swell as the baby boomers age. Many of them will require long-term care. Therapists will need in-depth, practical information about the unique psychological needs of older adults in long-term care settings. Professional Psychology of Long Term Care is the first book to provide therapists with the tools and skill sets they'll need to face the challenge of this demographic inevitability. Contributors to this groundbreaking work include Peter A. Lichtenberg, Ph.D, A.B.P.P., Joseph M. Casciani, Ph.D. and many other noted geropsychologists. In addition to valuable therapeutic strategies and practical insights, psychologists and mental health counselors can use this book to earn continuing education credits.
