Our heroes aren't perfect. They often fall from the pedestals built beneath their feet.

What if King David were alive today? What if he became President of the United States and was accused of committing the same offences as those found in the Old Testament? Then, in the process of attempting to conceal his mistakes, he finds himself, not only confronted by his own sinful actions, but accused of treason and murder? To truly find redemption, Josh Davis must face the truth of his own actions and answers to the lies levied against him. But what is real truth and what is supposed truth?

As a young Army Ranger, Josh Davis suffers a devastating tragedy while home on military leave. Unsure if he will be able to return to the Army, he puts his truth in God for strength to overcome his physical injuries.

After a military career, Josh decides to run for the highest office in the land- President of the United States. To his surprise, to win the election, he must campaign against his father-in-law, a former one-term President. Their political and personal conflict ends with a surprising tragic twist of fate.

Early presidential success leads Josh to seek a Middle-East peace to bring an end to political and military strife between several nations. Increasing pride slowly devours his faith and he succumbs to temptation, committing adultery. Not wanting anyone, especially his wife Michele, to discover his sin he attempts to cover it up, hoping his actions will disappear with his military plan named Twisted Wolf. He soon discovers that someone in his position a cover is nearly impossible.

His wife Michele watches her husband's downward as she questions what she should do. And divorce is a viable choice for her. He pleads his case all while he struggles with his own inner conflict of trusting God, wondering if it's too late to save his marriage and his presidency?

Leading the charge against him are two members of Congress, Senator Author Thompson and Representative Ben Sharkey. These two men are willing to go to any extent to see Josh removed from office, and impeachment is their goal. And overcoming a mountain of charges that include treason and the murder of six Navy SEALS is almost insurmountable.

To find redemption, Josh must face the truth and trust in God and those working to unearth the truth. That truth lies somewhere in a web of conspiracy.
